Subject: Consultation on proposed changes to strengthen the Air Passenger Protection Regulations

Hello,

As a frequent traveller, my concerns with the proposed updated APPR Regs are as follows:

- Large and Small airlines are treated wholly differently still. If you've made the penalties so steep for large companies that small ones cant meet them, then they are too steep for all. There should be one standard for all commercially operated airlines to reduce complexity for the traveler.

- Why is the government not holding itself accountable too? If there are airport security, air traffic control constraints etc. due to lack of services rendered from government contracted organizations, why should the airlines be held responsible for that?

Increasing the airline's cost/risk means they will simply charge the traveler more money to offset the financial risk that these government agencies may create, and in the end we will all pay for it.

I don't want to pay more taxes and/or airfare/surcharges to support this even larger, more cumbersome bureaucracy you are creating.
