Subject: Consultation on proposed changes to strengthen the Air Passenger Protection Regulations

The airline should not be allowed to overbook their flight for any reason. Should they practice overbooking they must be penalized the moment they do it. There is no need to wait or have complaints from the public. It must be an automatic penalty the moment they do it. With the current technology, the government and the airline can easily monitor compliance with this policy.

A no-show passenger is penalized for their action of non-compliance hence the airline suffers no loss if it flies with the unoccupied seat as it has been paid by the no-show passenger.

The industry is not helping anyone with their overbooking but an act of management greed.
