

Submitted to the Canadian Transportation Agency (Form submission)

Subject: Consultation on proposed changes to strengthen the Air Passenger Protection Regulations

Name: Nathan Schartner

Date: 2023-07-11

The airlines should have to provide compensation for ANY flight delay, other than weather or security conditions that will affect the safe operation of the airplane.

The airport not having enough staff to operate the runway/baggage/infrastructure is NOT the passengers issue and compensation should be provided.

If the airlines are not responsible, then why is there no legislation that compels the airport to refund passengers?

The airline having labour disruptions is NOT the passengers issue. If the airline is unable to keep their worker morale high enough to operate flights, then that is THEIR business decision.