Subject : Stop this ESA nonsense.

I want to see proof of training and proper certification credentials established for animals designated as support for proscribed conditions, with said credentials upheld to a base-level national standard for any animal that is deemed under the banner of "service animal". Until then, any and all animals outside of those trained for the blind and deaf should not be allowed anywhere in public, especially in places where maintaining hygiene is crucial, such as anywhere there is food.

Within a seven-day period I've seen people bring their dogs into a supermarket with exposed food including an open buffet twice (one dog was sick and constantly hacking; the owner was flippant and dismissive).

Signage dictating policy should be more visible as well; current signage is tiny and inadequate.
