Subject : Animals on flights

For me and my entire family, the only acceptable animal or creature on a flight should be service dogs that are fully trained for this task. Some of us have allergies and many of us just have a fear of animals. I will not pay a fare to end up near an animal who is probably as uncomfortable as I am nor do I want an odour that exists or could occur.

If a flight is going to allow animals, the pending passengers need to be informed when booking so they can make another choice of flight or airline.

On an aside, it shocks me when some flights now allow people with pets to pre board with the children. Let's remember who the general majority of the customers are.
