

Submitted by email to the Canadian Transportation Agency

Subject : Accessible Transportation

No animals should be allowed into the main cabin of any aircraft. So-called emotional support animals are a scam (and there is a pill for anxiety) and even certified service dogs are unnecessary - surely the flight attendants and fellow passengers can (and would be willing to) do more to assist a blind person during a flight than a dog can. Many people are affected by allergies to animals, particularly in a closed environment, and animals would be a serious hazard during an emergency. It's time to stop this nonsense.

LN Marshall