We have the weakest and poorest consumer rights legislation when it comes to airline passenger rights, and now you want to reduce our rights even further? Is this a joke?

Airlines in the US and Europe were forced to follow the law and reimburse their clients for cancelled flights.

We're the only suckers getting defrauded and robbed by airlines that refuse to follow the law and a weak government that refuses to enforce the law, not to mention the CTA which is really working for the airlines instead of for Canadians.

So if you want to know my opinion, it's a very firm NO.

In either case, from now on if I have the choice to use a non-canadian airline, I will, and I hope everyone else boycotts those thieves too.
